ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

Kate Bayliss is a Senior Research Fellow at the University of Sussex and Research Associate at SOAS and University of Leeds. Since completing her PhD in Development Economics at SOAS, she has worked on issues relating to social equity and the provision of infrastructure and essential services in the United Kingdom and the Global South. Her particular research interests are on the changing paradigms surrounding private sector engagement in meeting basic needs and on the distributional outcomes from such interventions. She has worked in academia as well as consultancy for civil society organizations, trade unions, and UN agencies. She has published articles in World Development, Competition and Change and the Journal of Development Studies. Her recent research focus is on the role of systemic issues in the provisioning of economic and social infrastructure. In 2020, she published A Guide to the Systems of Provision Approach: Who Gets What, How and Why, co-authored with Ben Fine.

Robert Birnbauer is a Lecturer at the Department of European Ethnology at Humboldt University of Berlin. He has taught numerous classes on Economic Anthropology, Qualitative Methods, and Digitalization at Humboldt University, from where he received his PhD, and at Technische Universität Chemnitz, Germany, where he has been a research associate. He has been visiting scholar at the Department of Anthropology at Harvard University. Robert has published about discourses and practices that evolve around the so-called “ethnic economy” concept and on the economic situation of homeless people in Berlin during the COVID-19 pandemic. For several years, he has been researching different markets, both virtual and local, in, around, and beyond Berlin. His main interests are economic anthropology, particularly the economic anthropology of markets, as well as political anthropology and digitalization.

Benjamin O.L. Bowles is a Lecturer in Social Anthropology at SOAS University of London and a Research Fellow at the Open University. His PhD research at Brunel University examined the lives of itinerant boat-dwellers on the canal and rivers of London and the South East of England. Following this, he worked as a Research Assistant to Professor Laura Bear at the LSE, examining the changing face of global maritime infrastructure financing practices. In 2018 he was Principle Investigator on the CRUISSE Network project Flexible and Reflexive Standards: Constructing Resilient Infrastructure in Uncertainty, working with the UK Government’s Cabinet Office to assess the resilience of infrastructure systems. Between 2019 and 2020, he was CO-I on the project Trajectories of Infrastructure Finance at SOAS, where he examined the future of private financing in the UK after the end of PFI, its infrastructure private financing initiative. Most recently, he has been working on Policing Uncertainty: Decisions and Actions in a National Emergency at the Open University, a project that investigates the decision making of senior police decision makers during the COVID-19 pandemic.

You-Kyung Byun is an Associate Researcher at the Free University of Berlin and teaching at the Humboldt University of Berlin, Germany. She earned her PhD in Social and Cultural Anthropology at the Free University of Berlin with a particular focus on the economic anthropological topic: gift and money. Her research interests include topics such as gifts, money, value, social network, migration, and work. Her research projects consider both German and Korean societies through migrant minorities (Korean food entrepreneurs in Berlin) and economic practices and value structures in comparative perspectives. She is currently looking for opportunities to combine data science and anthropology. She can be reached at byun.youkyung@gmail.com.

Maria Denisova is a PhD candidate at the Department Health, Ethics & Society, Care and Public Health Research Institute, Maastricht University. She is a sociologist by training. Her main research interests include science and technology studies, economic sociology, and studies of health care and human reproduction.

Heike Derwanz is a Professor of Material Culture in educational settings at the University of Oldenburg in Germany. As a cultural anthropologist and art historian specializing in metropolitan culture and lifestyle, she researches the role of economics in urban textile practices in households, and their embeddedness in city infrastructures, in her current projects. She was a member of the DFG research group Automatisms: The Emergence of Structures Beyond Planned Processes in Information Technology, Media and Culture at the University of Paderborn, where she conducted her PhD research on the art market. In 2016 and 2017, she was a guest professor for anthropology at the University of Bremen. She is currently preparing a book entitled Clothes in Affluence: Material Culture Studies and the Anthropology of Economics.

Olga Doletskaya is a PhD student at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies at the University College London. Her research focuses on queer parenthood in Russia. Her other research interests include assisted reproduction, surrogacy, and post-Soviet sociality.

Oksana Dorofeeva is a Junior Teacher at the University of Amsterdam, where she obtained her MSc in Social Sciences. Her research interests include cultural and economic sociology, Internet studies, and sociology of mothering.

Sidney M. Greenfield is a Professor of Anthropology Emeritus at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and Co-chair of the Columbia University Seminars on Brazil, Studies in Religion and Contents and Methods in the Social Sciences. He has conducted ethnographic research in Barbados and New Bedford, Massachusetts, but mostly in Brazil, and ethnohistorical and historical research in Portugal and the Atlantic Islands on problems ranging from family and kinship, patronage and politics, the history of plantations and plantation slavery, and entrepreneurship to Spiritist surgery and healing, syncretized Brazilian religions such as Candomblé, Umbanda and Kardecist Spiritism, and evangelical Protestants in Brazilian politics. He is author and/or editor of 9 books, producer, director, and author of 5 video documentaries and has published some 150 articles and reviews in books and professional journals. His most recent books include Evangelicos na Politica: Por Debaixo dos Panos (Evangelicals in Politics: What Happens Under the Sheets) – in Portuguese with Antonio Mourão Cavalcante – Editora Universidade Federal do Ceará (2016); a second edition of Dr Argeu: A Construção de um Santo Popular (Dr Argeu: The Construction of a Popular Saint) – also in Portuguese with Antonio Mourão Cavalcante – Editora Universidade Federal do Ceará (2016); and Spirits With Scalpels: The Cultural Biology of Spirit Healing in Brazil. San Francisco, CA: Left Coast Press, 2008 (2012 Available as an e-book.)

Dr Muhammad Salman Khan is a Postdoctoral Research Associate at the Department of Geography, School of Social Science and Public Policy, King's College London. Salman is an economic and institutional sociologist, working on informal markets, decentralization and local governance, institutional analysis, and borderland studies. Currently, Salman is simultaneously working on women markets in the northwest of Pakistan and illegal antiquities markets in Pakistan-Afghanistan's borderland. Salman can be reached at Muhammad\_salman.khan@kcl.ac.uk.

Sarah Lyon is a Professor of Anthropology and Associate Dean of Faculty Studies in the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Kentucky. Sarah teaches courses in Economic and Business Anthropology. She has conducted long-term research on how alternative food networks such as fair trade work to create and sustain diverse economies in the United States and Latin America.

Jessica Mannette earned her MA degree in Anthropology from the University of Ottawa in 2020. Her research interests and fieldwork experience include community-level food security in urban areas as it relates to policy and community-led food aid programs. She is currently collaborating with the Department of Applied Human Nutrition at Mount Saint Vincent University to conduct a community-based nutritional needs assessment as it relates to food security for people living with HIV/AIDS in Nova Scotia, Canada.

Colleen Alena O'Brien is a Postdoctoral Researcher at the Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg and is also affiliated with the Jena Center for Reconciliation Studies. She received her PhD in Linguistics at the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. Her dissertation was about the language and culture of the Kamsa, an Indigenous community in southern Colombia. She is producing a documentary film called Strangers to Peace about the process of reintegration of ex-guerrillas of the FARC into Colombian society. She has also conducted research in Indonesia, funded by Fulbright, and is now working on a discourse analysis project of FARC rhetoric.

Olubukola Olayiwola, a Wadsworth International Fellow (Wenner-Gren Foundation), has a bachelor's and master's degrees in Anthropology (University of Ibadan, Nigeria) and a PhD in Applied Anthropology (University of South Florida, USA). His training as an applied anthropologist has led him to focus on research that critically analyzes microfinancialization, the informal economic sector, women entrepreneurs, and gender issues with a regional focus on West Africa. His dissertation explores the lived experiences of women entrepreneurs and borrowers – petty commodity producers and traders in Ibadan, Nigeria, and their involvement in government-sponsored and private sector microfinance schemes. After completing his PhD, he was offered an adjunct faculty position at the Judy Genshaft Honors College, University of South Florida, where he taught IDH2010 (Acquisition of Knowledge) and IDH 4200-005/011 (Financialization: Cross-Cultural perspectives). He is currently working on academic publications including a book prospectus and consultancy project (Women and Agricultural Labor) with the World Bank.

Elisa Van Waeyenberge is a Senior Lecturer and (co-)Head of the Department of Economics, SOAS University of London. She has an interest in the political economy of macroeconomic policies, including the financing of infrastructure provision, and has recently collaborated on an interdisciplinary research project analyzing the shifting contours of infrastructure financing policy in the United Kingdom. This ties in with her long-standing interest in examining the way in which the policy space of countries in the Global South is affected by specific paradigms as promoted by International Financial Institutions. She has authored numerous publications on this topic; see <https://www.soas.ac.uk/staff/staff47581.php>. This includes a recent article (Dimakou et al., 2020; <https://doi.org/10.1080/02255189.2020.1839394>) in the Canadian Journal of Development Studies examining the response of the World Bank to COVID-19 and what this reveals in terms of the commitment of the institution to the role of private finance at the heart of development and infrastructure provision.

Donald C. Wood is an Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Medicine, Akita University, Akita, Japan, where he has worked since completing a doctoral degree in Cultural Anthropology at the University of Tokyo in 2004. Prior to that, he studied Anthropology under Norbert Dannhaeuser and Jeff Cohen at Texas A&M University. He spent more than 15 years researching social conditions at the Hachirogata reclaimed land area in Akita Prefecture, which culminated in the publication of Ogata-Mura: Sowing Dissent and Reclaiming Identity in a Japanese Farming Village, by Berghahn Books (NY) in 2012 (released in paperback in 2015). He has also investigated tourism and the effects of depopulation in the Akita region and was a contributor to the multi-authored book Japan's Shrinking Regions in the 21st Century (Cambria, 2011). Recently he has been conducting ethnohistorical research in northeastern Japan and contributing articles to Kyoto Journal, Sapiens, and New Politics.
