ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We would like to express our sincere gratitude to Stefinee Pinnegar for her enthusiastic support and encouragement for this volume. Generous and gracious with her time and insight, Stefinee believed in this project from the beginning. Thanks also to Mary Frances Rice for her willingness to review chapters (along with Stefinee) and her insightful comments. Sarah Jusseaume and Sumeyra Gök, doctoral students at the University of New Hampshire, provided excellent assistance with a variety of administrative and logistical tasks. Finally, thank you to all educators dedicated to improving their practices so that our schools and communities are more inclusive, participatory, and socially just.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Maria da Conceicao Athanassiou is Adjunct Faculty at the Graduate School of Education at Lesley University in Cambridge, Massachusetts. She worked as a Bilingual Educator and ESL Practitioner in public schools. Her research focuses on preparing teachers to adopt a culturally responsive pedagogy that supports the needs of all diverse learners.

Bethney Bergh is Associate Professor of Education at Northern Michigan University where she teaches online graduate courses in administration and supervision. Dr Bergh serves as Director of the Educational Administration and Education Specialist Programs in NMU's School of Education, Leadership and Public Service. Her courses emphasize mindful and reflective practices as a means of enhancing the educational experiences of both teachers and students. Dr Bergh's research interests include the development of school culture, ethical leadership, school safety, online teaching, and the use of self-study methodology to grow in one's practices.

Shawn Michael Bullock is Senior Lecturer in the History of Education at the University of Cambridge, UK. Prior to this appointment, he was Associate Dean of Graduate Studies in the Faculty of Education at Simon Fraser University, Canada. Dr Bullock's current research program explores the intersections between the history of education and teacher education.

Lucy Bunning is Assistant Teaching Professor at NU Global at Northeastern University in Boston, Massachusetts. She has taught English for speakers of other languages in university, private, and community-based programs. Her research focuses on pedagogies that support multilingual learners joining new discourse communities.

Abby Cameron-Standerford is Associate Professor of Education at Northern Michigan University, where she teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in special education and serves as Director for the Graduate Learning Disabilities program. Within the Learning Disabilities program, Dr Cameron-Standerford designs and teaches research-based courses on topics such as trends in special education, positive behavior supports, and methods for teaching content area subjects to students with learning disabilities. Her research interests include teacher preparation with purposeful and embedded universal design and modeling differentiated instruction, multimodal literacies, online learning, and self-study methodology as a framework to improve teaching and learning.

Amparo Clavijo Olarte is Professor of Literacy at Universidad Distrital Francisco José de Caldas, Bogotá, Colombia. Her most recent research focuses on Community Based Pedagogies and Literacies in Language Teacher Education. She has published articles and book chapters about Colombian public school teachers using community pedagogies with students to inquire about social and cultural issues that affect their neighborhoods.

Vy Dao is a Doctoral Candidate in Curriculum, Instruction, and Teacher Education at Michigan State University. Employing individual-social dialectics, Vy investigates the pedagogy of teacher education, focusing on multicultural education teaching practices, both inside and outside the US contexts. Vy employs ethnography and auto-ethnography as methodological lenses in her research.

Christi Edge is Associate Professor of Education at Northern Michigan University, where she teaches undergraduate secondary education methods courses, graduate K-12 reading and literacy courses, and where she is Extended Learning and Community Engagement Scholar. In 2016, she received the university's Excellence in Teaching Award. Presently, she serves as the Self-study of Teaching and Teacher Education Practices Secretary (2016–2018). Her research addresses teachers' classroom literacy, teachers' meaning making, becoming teachers, and learning from experience.

Scott Farver is a Doctoral Candidate in Curriculum, Instruction, and Teacher Education at Michigan State University. His work focuses on critical examinations of race, especially Whiteness, within teaching and teacher education. Scott is a former 5th grade teacher and a returned Peace Corps volunteer.

Brian Girard is Associate Professor in the Department of Educational Administration and Secondary Education at The College of New Jersey. He earned an MA and PhD in Educational Studies from the University of Michigan. A former middle school teacher, his research focuses on teaching and learning history.

Laura C. Haniford is Associate Professor in the Department of Teacher Education, Educational Leadership and Policy at The University of New Mexico. A former middle school English teacher, her research focuses on the discursive construction of teacher identities, and the use of self-study methodology.

Davena Jackson is a Doctoral Candidate in Curriculum, Instruction and Teacher Education at Michigan State University. Her research focuses on critical examinations of racial literacy, race, racism, and antiblackness among teachers and students within teaching and English education. Davena is a former middle and high school English Teacher.

Marjori Krebs is Associate Professor in the Department of Teacher Education, Educational Leadership and Policy in the College of Education at the University of New Mexico. Dr Krebs teaches both undergraduate and graduate students in teacher preparation. Her research focuses on teacher preparation, service-learning, and project-based learning.

Lu Leng is Assistant Professor in Department of English Education at Jinan University, China. She holds a PhD in Educational Psychology from the University of Hawaii at Manoa. Dr Leng has done extensive research on Philosophy for Children approach to education and psychological and cultural analysis on educational/behavioral phenomenon.

Megan Madigan Peercy is Associate Professor at the University of Maryland. Her research focuses on preparation and development of teachers throughout their careers, as they work with linguistically and culturally diverse learners. Her recent research appears in Teaching and Teacher Education, Action in Teacher Education, and International Multilingual Research Journal.

Karen Ragoonaden is Director of the Summer Institute in Education and Professional Development programs at The University of British Columbia. Her teaching, research, and service reflect her commitment to provide educational leadership in conceptualizing culturally responsive approaches, curriculum design, and innovation. Fluently bilingual in English and French, her academic interests span the breadth of scholarship of teaching and learning with a focus on French Education, Contemplative Practices, and Aboriginal Education. Bridging the gap between narrative inquiry and action research, her work in the area of Self-Study of Teacher Education Practices (S-STEP) has proven to be an important component of developing practitioner inquiry.

Maribel Ramírez Galindo teaches English and Spanish Language Arts at Institución Educativa Alfonso López Pumarejo, Bogotá, Colombia. She is a former Lecturer in the MA in Applied Linguistics Program at Universidad Distrital Francisco José de Caldas, Bogotá, Colombia. As a Practitioner-Researcher she focuses on critical literacies and community-based pedagogies.
